Why is the Blue Book?

There is a reason for all that endures. The Blue Book goes on from year to year, keeping pace with the social development of Toledo and neighboring territory; and there is a reason for it.

We have city directories, telephone and other directories, but none of these gives in so compact and convenient form the information given in the Blue Book.

The social connections of any one family are so many, and reach out in so many directions that she would be a wise woman indeed, and possess a marvelous memory, who could make up a list of invitations without the aid of the Blue Book, and not forget some one she wouldn't have forgotten for worlds. With the Blue Book at hand such humiliating oversights are impossible.

This is but one of the many useful purposes this publication serves. It isn't a small class publication. It isn't an exclusive publication of one small social set. Rather is it a complete family and home directory, not only of the fathers and mothers and sons and daughters of Toledo, but also of those of the nearby cities and towns which come within the same great social circle as Toledo.

This year's Blue Book is as thoroughly up to date as all its predecessors. It brings the social information of this territory up to now, preserving all of its old excellent features and adding some new ones.

And in its advertising pages you will find the same discriminating sense of the eternal fitness of things has been preserved.

SIXTEEN REASONS WHY AN IDEAL FIRELESS COOKER

Should be in YOUR kitchen. Read them over and see whether or not you really need that many to convince you that an IDEAL is indispensable.

- IT does not overcook.
- IT costs nothing to operate.
- IT saves energy and anxiety.
- IT saves at least 75% of fuel.
- IT does not require watching.
- IT is wasteful to be without it.
- IT works while you visit, shop or sleep.
- IT is offered you on thirty days' free trial.
- IT prevents burning of cooking utensils.
- IT does away with steam and cooking odors.
- IT has few utensils and they are easily cleaned.
- IT enables you to go to church without anxiety.
- IT does not overheat the kitchen in hot weather.
- IT makes failures in cooking well-nigh impossible.
- IT saves three-fourths of the time usually devoted to cooking.
- IT solves the culinary problem for those who must be away from home all day.

JOE KIESWETTER AUTOMOBILE HOUSE CLEANER

Experience in the last 25 years has taught me how to treat the most delicate Oriental Rugs and repair them like the man that makes them—invisible patching. I dye your carpets in Toledo; others send them out of the city to be dyed. The founder of rugs made of old carpets—making improvements all the time. "Keep in the Lead" is my motto.

ETIQUETTE

There is no country where there are so many people asking what is "proper to do," or, indeed, where there are so many genuinely anxious to do the proper thing, as in the vast conglomerate which we call the United States of America. The newness of our country is perpetually renewed by the sudden making of fortunes, and by the absence of a hereditary reigning set. There is no aristocracy here which has the right and title to set the fashions. We believe the outward and visible signs of aristocracy are shown in perfect breeding, charm of manner, and unfailing courtesy, of which the inward grace is an instinctive refinement that is not merely a decorative attribute.

But a "reigning set," whether it depend upon hereditary right or adventitious wealth, if it be possessed of a desire to lead and a disposition to hospitality, becomes for a period the dictator of fashion to a large number of lookers-on. The traveling world, living far from great centers, goes to Newport, Saratoga, New York, Washington, Philadelphia, Boston, and gazes on what is called the latest American fashion. This, though exploited by what we may call for the sake of distinction the "newer set," is influenced and shaped in some degree by people of native refinement and taste, and that wide experience which is gained by travel and association with broad and cultivated minds. They counteract the tendency to vulgarity, which is the great danger to a newly launched society, so that our social condition improves, rather than retrogrades, with every decade. There is a Council of Trent, we may say, every five years, perhaps even every two years, in our new and changeful country, and we learn that, follow as we may either the grand old etiquette of England or the more gay and shifting social code of France, we still must make an original etiquette of our own. Our political system alone, where the lowest may rise to the highest preferment, upsets in a measure all that the Old World insists upon in matters of precedence and formality. We must fit our garments to the climate, our manners to our fortunes and to our daily lives.

There are established rules which regulate visiting, the use of cards, the leaving or sending of cards, and when these rules are clearly understood and faithfully followed there is a feeling of satisfaction which relieves the conscience.

Of course one should try to make one or two informal calls on intimate friends during the year. These calls cannot be classed in the more ceremonious visiting which we are considering at the moment, but it should be understood that even between intimate friends the code of etiquette is the same in regard to the acknowledgment of all invitations.

Ceremonious card leaving is obligatory after receiving invitations to a wedding reception, a dinner, luncheon, card party or an evening entertainment, the call to be made and cards left within a week after the event, and whether one has accepted or not. If one has sent a regret one may call before the event.

An invitation to a church wedding requires that cards be sent on the day of the event, or soon after, to those in whose name it was issued and to the newly married pair. This applies also to marriage announcements, but it is polite to call personally on a bride, within the year if possible, if she is already on one's visiting list.

It is well understood that a married woman leaves her husband's cards with her own—one of her own cards for each lady in a family, and one each of her husband's cards for each lady and one for the man of the family. If there are daughters in the household, one card of her husband's may include them. If she has a grown son she may leave two of his cards. These formalities are for the first call of the season. She need not leave her husband's cards in future calls during the year unless he has been the recipient of invitations, the courtesy of which must be acknowledged, and she may allow her son to attend to his own future calls.

The general rule is that a woman should make a call once a year on friends and acquaintances. One member of a family may leave the cards of others. Cards for an afternoon tea do not require a reply. They indicate merely that a hostess will be at home to her friends, who may come or not as they please. Those who call leave their cards as a reminder to the hostess that they have been present, and may leave the cards of members of their family as an acknowledgment of the invitation. Those who cannot go, or cannot send cards by a member of the family, enclose their cards in small envelopes addressed by hand and sent by mail on the day of the event. If a call is made or cards are sent one's duty is done, and a call afterwards is not required.

When making a first call, or any formal call, cards are left. A lady may give her own card to the servant who opens the door and may lay her husband's card on the hall table in passing. Cards are never handed to the hostess or to any member of the family. A first call should be returned within a month, at latest. When calling on a friend who is visiting those whom one may not know, it is correct to ask for the hostess and leave a card, although she may excuse herself, assuming from courtesy that the guest and her visitor may prefer to be alone. Acceptances or regrets must never be written on cards. It is not in good taste for more than two members of a family to call together. A mother may be accompanied by one daughter and leave cards of the others.

In social parlance one does not "make calls," one speaks of making or paying "visits"; and one never uses the expression an "at home." It is a "tea." Even the most formal reception is spoken of in this way.

A custom in England which is being adopted here is to write the words, "To inquire," on one's card when one calls on a friend who is ill. A married woman calling to inquire would leave one of her own cards, and occasionally one of her husband's cards if the invalid is a personal friend of the husband as well as her own. The words "To inquire" are written upon a lady's card, unless the invalid is the husband of the lady called upon. In that case the words are written on the husband's card. If the invalid is a daughter in the family called upon, a lady leaves only her own cards. Necessarily cards of inquiry may not be sent by post, as the object is to make personal inquiries of the condition of the invalid. After recovery from an illness one may call on friends who have left cards, or may send to acquaintances cards with the words "With thanks for kind inquiries."

When going to a hotel to call, one sends up a card by a servant and waits in one of the reception-rooms. One may write on the card the name of the person for whom it is intended.

Invitations and Answers

The form of an invitation usually indicates whether an answer is expected. When the pleasure of one's company is requested, a reply must be sent. There must be no delay in answering an invitation to a dinner, luncheon, home wedding, wedding breakfast, card party, or theatre party. A note of invitation to a dinner requires a written note of reply within twenty-four hours, so that a hostess may know whether she may expect a guest and have time to supply the place should a guest decline. Those who entertain often and in a formal manner use a card of invitation, engraved in script, with blank spaces in which may be written the name of the guest, the words "at dinner," and the date and hour. The form is:

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Germain request the pleasure of

*Company _____ On _____
At _____ o'clock
One hundred Fifth Avenue*

If a special event is to follow a dinner, the words indicating it are written on the lower left-hand corner of the invitation or across the lower part. The exact form when fully written may be:

*Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dash
request the pleasure of Miss Robinson's company at dinner
on Wednesday evening
December 27th at eight o'clock*

If an occasion is in honor of guests, the preferred and courteous form is to begin an invitation with the names of guests:

To meet

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hall

The general fashion is to write the lines above the engraved names of host and hostess.

For a very ceremonious occasion, a card engraved for the purpose should be used. When older persons entertain in honor of very young people, as, for example, when parents invite guests to meet a bride and bridegroom a form may be:

Mr. and Mrs. William Delafield request the pleasure of your company on Thursday evening, January the eleventh at nine o'clock, to meet

Mr. and Mrs. William Delafield, Junior

R. s. v. p.

606 Fifth Avenue

A formal invitation to a dinner may be written on note paper instead of engraved on a card.

The word "ball" is never used on invitations. In fact, the word is in disuse in conversation, the terms "cotillion" and "dance" having taken its place. The French words bal poudré are allowable on an invitation, and indicate that guests are expected to wear fancy dress and powdered hair. Invitations to weddings and formal dinners are sent in the name of the host and hostess, but for an afternoon tea they are issued by the hostess alone.

Invitations to dinners and luncheons are, of course, not sent to friends who are in mourning, but invitations to weddings, receptions, etc., must be sent as a mark of compliment and remembrance, even when it is known that these friends will not accept.

There can be no provisional acceptance of an invitation to a luncheon, a dinner or a card party. An invitation for a husband and wife must be accepted or declined by both. One should not accept without the other.

Frequently the difficulty with the writer of a reply seems to be in choosing the words in which to write an acceptance or regret. The best course always is to observe very carefully the formula of an invitation and follow it precisely in reply. If it is in the third person, the reply must be in the third person; if in the first person it must be answered in the first person.

The answer to a home wedding invitation must be sent to the bride's parents. The envelope containing the answer to an invitation should be addressed to the hostess, not to the host and hostess. An invitation to a church wedding does not need a written reply, but it is courteous to acknowledge the fact that one has been remembered; therefore cards should be sent to the bride's parents if the address is known, and to the newly married pair on the day of the wedding or immediately after. If preferred, cards may be left later at the mother's house, but without asking for any one.

If a previous engagement cannot be offered when writing a formal refusal, and yet there exists some good reason for not accepting, the words may be "regret that they are unable to accept the very kind invitation," etc. It is not correct to say "will be unable." The fact of the refusal rests in the present, not in the future. Answers to invitations are not written on cards. It is exceedingly bad form to enclose a card with "Regrets," or "Accepts" written on it.

The rule is to send a wedding invitation to Mr. and Mrs. C., a separate one to the Misses C., and a separate one to each young man in the family. It is not proper to address "Mr. and Mrs. C. and family."

Invitations to be sent by mail are enclosed in an outer envelope. The inner envelope is addressed to Mr. and Mrs. C., the outer envelope bears the full name and address. When wedding invitations or cards for large receptions are to be delivered by hand, each invitation has but one envelope, without mucilage, and unsealed, and addressed with street address. An invitation to a dinner is sealed.

For a birthday party a young girl may write informal notes to her friends:

My dear Mary:

I am asking a few friends to spend Thursday evening, May ninth, with me, to celebrate my birthday, and it will give me much pleasure if you and your brother will come at eight o'clock. Cordially yours,

Margaret Lawrence

A girl may, with her mother's approval, write a note of this sort:

My dear Mr. White:

My mother wishes me to say that it will give her much pleasure if you will spend Saturday evening, September fifteenth, with us, very informally.

We are asking a few friends to meet Miss Rose Post, who is staying with us, and we hope to see you at half after eight o'clock. Yours sincerely,

Note-writing

Plain white or cream paper, rather thick in quality, unruled, and folded once to fit the envelope is in good taste. Persons in mourning use paper and envelopes with mourning border three-eighths of an inch wide, or with a narrow line, according to the depth or period of mourning. Postal cards are not for social usage, and typewriting is strictly for business.

The address may be engraved in Roman letters across the head of the paper, or a small monogram may be used. If there is no engraved address it may be written at the head of the page towards the right.

Envelopes have no ornamentation. Handwriting should be legible, the vertical or angular style, or the small round letters being equally in fashion at present. Words are separated distinctly, and are written in straight lines. Writing is not crowded at the margin, nor are words divided from one line to the next.

A note is begun about two inches from the top of the paper, and a margin is left at the foot of the page. A new subject in a note requires a new paragraph, and in beginning a paragraph a margin of about an inch is allowed. It is best to write straight on from page to page, rather than to skip about from one page to another.

Signatures are written in full and never with a prefix. Abbreviations or pet names are incorrect in signatures or addresses. It is bad form to sign "Susie," "Birdie," "Bessie," or to address an envelope to "Jno.," "Jas.," or "Chas.," etc. A bad habit is to use the sign "&" for "and," or to crowd the word "and" vertically between words.

In a date the name of the month is written in full; the date of the month must be in numerals when the date of the year follows, or may be written when the year is omitted. It is an affectation to write out the year in full. Numerals are used for it.

In addressing an envelope to a man the form is, Richard Wood, Esq. A woman is not addressed by her husband's title. An address is, Mrs. William Green, not Mrs. Dr. Green or Mrs. Gen. Green. A widow is addressed as Mrs. George Smith, not Mrs. Anna Smith. The sign # before a street number is obsolete, and the abbreviation "No." before figures is not in use. The word "Street" is used, not "St." One does not write "City" on social notes. The street address is considered sufficient on local notes. One should write words in full and not use the abbreviations Wash., Cin., Balt., or Phila.

Notes can be cordial without being gushing or effusive. The best rule is to write notes of acknowledgment for wedding gifts with as little delay as possible, before the feeling of pleasure in the receipt of gifts has subsided. It is well to mention the gift definitely—the charming clock, the beautiful silver dish, the attractive cut-glass vase, the handsome lamp, the lovely piece of silver. People like to have their gift specialized, and adjectives of enthusiasm are allowable.

When a gift is received from a husband and wife a note is written to the wife. Something in this form may be a suggestion to a bride-elect:

My dear Mrs. Park :

The gift which you and Mr. Park have so kindly sent to me has pleased me more than I can say. It will be a charming addition to my new home, and often remind me of your friendly thoughtfulness.

Yours cordially,

Elizabeth Clarkson

Or one may say: "It was a great pleasure to receive the beautiful clock which you and Mr. Park have so kindly sent to me. I hope I may have the opportunity very soon of telling you personally how much I appreciate your gift."

A form of resignation from a club is in reality an official communication and may be very concise:

My dear Mrs. Dash :

I regret that circumstances make it impossible for me to retain my membership in the——club after June first.

Will you be so kind as to accept my resignation from that date?

Sincerely yours,

Mary Wainright

It is a painful duty to write a note of condolence to a friend who has lost a relative, yet few persons realize how much a note of this sort is valued. The letter is liked better if the writer does not attempt to sermonize. "My thoughts are with you in your sorrow and I am writing to assure you of my deep sympathy," or, "My heart goes out to you in your sorrow," or, "in the blow which has fallen on you," are words which suggest themselves as fitting.

A reply to a note of sympathy may be brief but appreciative. Something of this sort might be said:

My dear Mary:

Your kind letter of sympathy is truly appreciated. It is a great help to know that my friends are thinking of me at this time, and your words are very comforting.

Yours sincerely,

Edith Ward

Friends are invited to card parties by informal notes or formal invitations in the third person, or the card of the hostess may do duty, with the words, "Bridge at three o'clock," or "Euchre at three o'clock," written on the card with the date and R. S. V. P. Guests are expected to reply by note, without delay and definitely, to an invitation to a card party. A dressing-room where ladies may leave their wraps should be provided. Hats are not removed at an afternoon party. Gloves are removed when playing cards. A hostess may include many guests in one afternoon by sending invitations for a card party for three o'clock to those who would like to play cards, and sending cards for tea at five to others who are averse to card playing but who may be glad to come in later, informally.

A man who is well-bred knows that he must call and leave a letter of introduction with his card, but on no account must enter the house. His duty is to allow the person addressed an opportunity to decide on his merits.

A bachelor who acts as host must have a chaperon always for any occasion where ladies are to be present, whether it be a theatre party, supper, or other entertainment. His duty is to sit next to the chaperon at the play or at supper. He has the forethought to order the supper in advance and has a table reserved and the account settled before going to a restaurant.

Wedding Preparations

A church wedding involves more trouble and expense than a home ceremonial. The laws of etiquette require that a bride's family shall pay all the expenses of the wedding. The trousseau, invitations, house or church decorations, cost of opening the church, music, awnings, carriages for bridal party, marriage announcements, notices published in newspapers—all these are paid by the bride's parents or nearest relatives.

The bridegroom is permitted to pay for nothing but the ring, the fee to the clergyman, bouquets to bride and bridesmaids, gifts to ushers and best man; also provides the carriage for his best man and himself to go to the church or house on the wedding day.

At a day wedding in a church bridesmaids wear hats. At a home wedding they dispense with hats and wear pretty ornaments in the hair, wreaths or sprays of artificial flowers. "One of the chief duties of bridal attendants," remarked a bright woman, "is to keep their wits about them." They are expected to be useful as well as ornamental.

The best man's duties are to be attentive to the interests and wishes of the bridegroom. He must accompany him to the church, enter the vestry with him, walk beside him, preceded by the clergyman when entering for the ceremony, stand at the bridegroom's left on the chancel step facing the assemblage awaiting the bride, and stand at the bridegroom's right, a few paces back, during the ceremony. He keeps the wedding-ring in his waistcoat pocket and gives it to the bridegroom at the required moment. He is entrusted with the fee for the clergyman, and may give it either before or after the ceremony, but in the vestry, not in the church.

A bride who elects to be married in a traveling dress wears hat and gloves. She does not have bridesmaids. She may have a maid-of-honor, who should not be dressed in white, but should wear a street or reception dress, hat and gloves.

A bride who is a widow does not wear white or a veil, and is not attended by bridesmaids. She wears gray or mauve, with a hat. Usually she chooses to be married in a traveling dress.

When a widow becomes engaged she continues to wear her wedding-ring until the day of her second marriage, when she removes it and puts it away.

If a bride's father is not living and there is no brother or male relative to perform the duty, the bride's mother may give her away. The mother should enter the church before the bridal party and be escorted to a front pew by an usher. At the proper time in the ceremony the bride's mother advances to the altar, gives away her daughter and returns to her seat.

The present fashion is to display wedding gifts a day or two before the wedding, instead of on the wedding day. The bride-elect and her mother write informal notes, asking friends who have sent presents to come in on an afternoon designated. The gifts are arranged on tables and the cards of the givers are with the gifts. The informal serving of tea closes the afternoon. When wedding gifts are displayed on the wedding day, it is optional

Customs at the Table

There is no place where a person's good breeding and early training are more clearly shown than at the table. When taking one's seat at table one takes up the napkin, takes the roll or bread from within it and places it at the left hand, on the table, and lays the napkin partly unfolded across the lap.

Oysters on the shell must be eaten whole, not cut in half. If grapefruit is served an orange spoon should be on the right. The soup spoon is used for soup. Soup should be taken from the side of the spoon, turned away from the eater and sipped noiselessly. Sipping one's soup with a hissing noise is unpardonable, and tilting the soup plate to secure the last spoonful is bad form.

Neither soup nor fish is ever offered twice.

The silver fish knife and fork are now in general use, the knife being necessary in separating the bones from the fish. The fork farthest from the plate is to be used as each course is served. A small portion of meat is cut as required, the knife being retained in the right hand, the fork in the left, the fork held with the prongs down, the handle of the fork resting in the palm of the hand while cutting food or conveying it to the mouth.

All vegetables, peas, tomatoes, etc., are eaten with a fork. When eating vegetables the knife is laid on the plate, the blade resting near the center. The knife must not be placed across the edge of the plate, nor with the handle resting on the table. The fork is then taken in the right hand, the prongs turned up, the handle of the fork resting easily on the hand between the first finger and the thumb. If need be, a crust of bread may be used with the left hand to press a morsel of food towards the fork. It is not an uncommon thing to see a man make a hod of his fork, and, using the knife for a trowel, slap one thing upon another until he gets a full load, which is not always safely carried to the mouth. Take small pieces at a time, and never have so much in your mouth that you cannot speak with ease. When cutting meat the finger must never rest on the blade of the knife but on the handle.

Odd methods of holding the fork should be avoided. The fork is raised laterally to the mouth. It is awkward to crook or project the elbow or to point the fork towards the mouth. Very little food at a time should be taken on the fork. When one has finished eating, the knife and fork are placed close together in the center of the plate, the prongs of the fork turned down.

When drinking water or wine one takes a sip at a time, not a glassful. Some entrées, such as cutlets or soft-shell crabs, require the aid of a knife for cutting; but for patties, timbales, sweetbreads or croquettes a fork only is used.

Asparagus may be taken up in the fingers by the stalks, but the later custom is to cut off the points with knife and fork. Lettuce should be cut with a fork, the portion of the leaf rolled up and thus eaten. Soft cheeses should be eaten with a fork, or a morsel may be put on a piece of bread with a knife and thus conveyed to the mouth with the fingers. It is allowable to take up a morsel of cheese in the fingers, but it is best to use a fork.

Small birds, such as quail and squab, are served whole, one for each person, and one cuts the meat from the breast and eats each piece at the time of cutting it.

Whenever possible a fork should be used for dessert in preference to a spoon. The dessert spoon is for berries, peaches and cream, preserves, custards, jellies, etc.

With the dessert plate is brought the small silver, laying it down at the right and left. After the dessert, the fruit plate is brought. A finger-bowl rests on the plate, and one removes the finger-bowl and the tiny doily which is beneath it, placing them at the left on the table.

Roman punch is eaten with a spoon. An olive is taken up in the fingers to be eaten with a few bites without taking the stone in the mouth.

Pears, apples or peaches should be peeled with a silver knife, cut in quarters, and the pieces taken up in the fingers. Fruit which is very juicy had best be eaten with a fork. After peeling a banana it is best to cut the fruit in pieces and eat them with a fork. Oranges are cut in halves and eaten with an orange spoon.

Watermelon is served as a separate course at dessert and is eaten with a fork.

When grapes are eaten the seeds and skins must be removed quietly with the fingers.

Cherry stones may be disposed of quietly behind the half-closed hand by allowing them to fall into the fingers. This applies to fresh cherries. Preserved cherries are eaten with a dessert-spoon, and the stones must be unobtrusively removed from one's mouth into the spoon and placed at the side of the plate. Plums are taken in the fingers of the right hand and a few bites of the fruit are taken without taking the stone in the mouth.

If cake is served at dessert, one takes it on the plate with the dessert, breaks off a small piece and takes it up in the fingers to eat. Before leaving the table one dips the tips of the fingers lightly in the finger-bowl and dries them on the napkin, and may touch the moist finger-tips to the lips and touch a corner of the napkin to the lips. When rising from the table one leaves the napkin unfolded at the left of one's plate.

A hostess rises first and the others rise simultaneously. One should be seated from the side of the chair which is nearest when approaching, and may rise from either side, or from the side nearest the exit from the dining-room, as it is awkward to rise and walk around one's chair. The chair should not be pushed back in place after one has risen from the table.

It is not polite to appear to be in haste to begin eating, but it is allowable to begin when served. It is not polite to continue to eat after others have finished.

Sauce, vegetables, etc., are taken on one's plate with the meat, not in separate saucers. Coffee is sometimes served before the guests leave the table, but the better custom is to have it passed later in the drawing-room. In either case the small coffee-cups, sugar and cream are passed on the tray. A small coffee-spoon is laid on each saucer.

At breakfast or luncheon a small bread and butter plate may be placed at the left of each place at the table. A slice of bread should never be spread with butter; one breaks off a small piece of the bread or roll, butters it and eats it. Butter is not used at dinner; neither is a bread plate used then.

Bad habits at table are playing with the silver, crumbling the bread, or cutting it with a knife, or eating it between courses as though one were hungry.

ETIQUETTE NOTES

Unpardonable habits are leaving a teaspoon in a cup even for a moment, or sipping tea or coffee from a spoon. The spoon may be used to stir the tea a moment and is then placed on the saucer, and a sip of tea taken from the cup.

Salt is never distributed on the food on one's plate. A little salt is taken from a saltcellar with a salt-spoon and placed on one side of the plate and used as required on portions of food.

The correct way to eat a boiled egg is to place it in a small egg-cup which holds the egg on end and eat the egg from the shell, cracking the large end with the spoon and taking off a piece of shell large enough to admit the egg-spoon.

At luncheon bouillon is served in cups and is taken with a spoon; the spoon may be put down and the cup raised to the lips for the last spoonfuls.

When a plate is passed for a second serving the knife and fork are left on it placed close together.

The leaves of artichokes are picked off with the fingers and the ends opposite the tops are eaten. Lettuce should not be cut up, but handled with the fork only.
